IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL

The Maxwell School's Washington Seminar

Government in Action

Bring your studies of political science to life with first-hand inquiry. Become a part of the nation's government for three exciting weeks. Develop those insights possible only through watching and evaluating for yourself the processes by which national policy is shaped.

Meet senators, representatives, administrators, ambassadors; speak to the Congressional leaders responsible for legislation. Then speak to the administrators who have to carry out the laws. Get to know and understand their problems.

Get "Behind the Headlines" in a Penetrating Educational Program

Regular seminars with experienced faculty members from Syracuse University's Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs will help you analyze the significance of little-reported events that shape the nation's destiny, understand the intricacies of your federal government. Under their supervision, graduate students will conduct an independent research project.

Study in Washington

Fallout shelters? Speedier integration? The space program? Aid to developing nations? Negotiations over divided Germany? Domestic welfare programs? The farm problem?

Questions such as these are undoubtedly of concern to you as they are to 180 million other Americans. The Washington Seminar is designed to give you the opportunity to inquire at first hand into attempts to solve these and the hundreds of other less spectacular but nevertheless significant day-to-day problems faced in the nation's capital.

With democratic government made up of all of us, the workings of the American federal system should not remain remote and unknown. It should not be "they in Washington." It need not be any longer. The nation's capital is only a few hundred miles away in distance—a few months in time if you decide now to enroll for the Washington Seminar.

In so doing you will become part of a small group of college men and women, students from many institutions, students with many academic backgrounds, joined for three weeks in a common bond of interest, an interest in learning more about the conduct of the nation's business, an interest in seeing for themselves the surroundings in which our federal government is operated, an interest in talking with those men who make the decisions that shape the future of us all.

Housing arrangements are made by the Washington Seminar in order to assure convenience of location and an opportunity for close association among its members. Staff supervision is provided for living conditions and arrangements.

Room charges will be modest—about $3.50 per day, four persons in a family suite of two twin-bed rooms. Single and double rooms are somewhat higher. Meals will vary according to individual tastes, but first-rate meals can be found for about $3.00 per day. Carfare and incidentals may average $1.00 per day. Payment for hotel accommodations and meals will be made individually. Hotel bills are payable upon arrival in Washington.

You will make your own arrangements for travel to and from Washington. In the past, many members of the seminar have found it convenient to share expenses by driving together to Washington.

Application

In order to apply for the Washington Seminar, fill out both copies of the attached application form and submit them together with letters of recommendation from two of your instructors.

A registration fee of $30 is required with your application. This fee is credited to your tuition (or may be refunded upon withdrawal prior to May 22, 1962). The tuition for both undergraduates and graduates is $132 ($44 per credit hour). The balance of $102 is payable not later than May 22, 1962.

Make all checks and money orders payable to Syracuse University.

subject of particular interest. Submission of a report on your findings will be required within six weeks of the seminar's conclusion.

Undergraduates will receive three hours' Syracuse University credit for enrollment in and successful completion of the course work for Political Science 104s, with grading on the basis of the interview work, a critically analytical conference log and a final examination. These credits are transferable to your own institution, under its regulations.

You may, if you wish, register for the seminar without academic credit, in which case you will not be required to complete the log and examination.

Graduates may receive credit by registering for Political Science 204s and completing the research project noted above as well as the other course requirements. Such graduate credit may be transferred subject to the rules of your own institution.

In the Capital

In addition to your studies, your schedule will permit you to visit key points of interest in and around Washington, so be sure to bring your camera. You will be able to see the White House, Library of Congress, Washington National Monument, Jefferson and Lincoln Memorials, Smithsonian Institution and the National Gallery of Art. You will have an opportunity to visit Washington's Mount Vernon, Arlington National Cemetery with its lovely ante bellum Custis-Lee Mansion, Charlottesville and the Jefferson-planned University of Virginia campus, as well as historic restored Williamsburg.

SENATOR BARRY GOLDWATER, REPUBLICAN, VISITS WITH PARTICIPANTS

UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE BOWLES ADDRESSES THE SEMINAR

You will talk with top officials in various executive departments such as the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Health, Education and Welfare; with members of both houses of Congress; with staffs of congressional committees. You will visit actual sessions of Congress and the United States Supreme Court, and go behind the scenes to attend committee hearings.

In addition to meeting government officials and observing activities of various governmental agencies, you will confer with officials of both major political parties, with press representatives in Washington, with labor-union and trade-association spokesmen, and with diplomatic representatives of foreign countries.

The major themes of the 1962 Seminar will be American Foreign Policy and the New Frontier.

The main activity of the Washington Seminar will be conducted through group interviews, held daily throughout the three-week period, in which you will meet and question the various officials, representatives, party and interest group spokesmen and correspondents.

In addition you will attend regular seminar sessions conducted by the professional staff for "filling you in" on the background of the agencies you will visit and "briefing" you on the role of the officials you will interview. There will be group conferences as well, in which you and the other members participating in the seminar will review and appraise your Washington experiences.

If you are taking the course for graduate credit, you will have an opportunity to conduct an independent or group research project into some
